Quiet Quitting

Employee Perspective

1. What are your working hours? When do you actually start working?
2. How much of the workday do you spend actually working?
3. Have you ever gone the extra mile, or do you do the bare minimum?
4. Do you answer work messages after hours, or leave them for tomorrow?
5. How do you feel about overtime — do you take it or avoid it?
6. Do you volunteer for new projects, or only do what the job requires?
7. Do you feel loyal to your company, or are you just clocking in?
8. Do you join team events and mentoring, or quietly skip them?

In the Office

1. What do you do during your lunch break? Is it really a break?
2. How engaged are you in meetings — do you speak or just listen?
3. Do you update your boss on progress, or wait for the weekly meeting?
4. Do you reply to every message, or only the important ones?
5. When was the last time you learned a new skill for work?
6. Do you leave exactly on time, or stay late without being asked?
7. Do you take your full holiday days, or save them for later?

Why People Do It

1. Is quiet quitting a protest, a way to set limits, or just laziness?
2. Are people quiet quitting, or just burned out? How can you tell?
3. Does a bad manager push people into quiet quitting?
4. Is a fair salary enough to keep people working hard?
5. Does quiet quitting hurt the team, or only the company?
6. Would you tell your boss if a colleague quietly quit?

Career and Money

1. Can good pay stop quiet quitting? What actually motivates you?
2. Does quiet quitting hurt your career growth in the long run?
3. Is it possible to work quietly and still get promoted?
4. Would you rather be the hardest worker or the happiest one?
5. Have you ever quietly quit a job before you actually left it?
6. Does changing jobs solve the problem, or make it worse?
7. What would your ideal workday include to keep you engaged?

Employer Perspective

1. How can a company spot quiet quitting before people leave?
2. Should managers punish quiet quitters or try to win them back?
3. Is quiet quitting contagious? Can it spread through a team?
4. How does the culture change when people stop going the extra mile?
5. How can a manager rebuild a team's energy after a hard year?
6. Would more flexible hours keep people engaged?
7. Should a company fix work-life balance before anything else?
8. Do clear career paths stop people from quietly quitting?

What Would Fix It

1. Do regular one-on-one check-ins actually help? Why?
2. Would better pay and recognition make any real difference?
3. How should a manager talk to someone who looks burned out?
4. Does remote work make quiet quitting easier or harder?
5. What is one rule a company could change to fix this?
6. Would you trust a company that suddenly promised to change?
